IMPROVED PHONE SYSTEM SOON TO BE INSTALLED

No More Turning the Crank After Next Octo-

Antioch will have a new modern: telephone system in operation by the middle of next October, according to George L. Wilburn, manager of the Illinois Bell telephone company. The new building now being constructed on the west side of Victoria st., south of Lake, by H. C. and Lora A. Hughes will be occupied by the telephone company early in that month and the new equipment instaled. The switchboard, terminal equipment, operators' quarters and the company's business office will all be in the new home.

When the new equipment goes into service all telephones in Antioch will be changed from the present "magneto" to the "common battery" type of operation in which the user signals the operator by merely lifting the telephone receiver instead of by cranking as at present. THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1938

The CIO at North Chicago The strike that has tied up the North Chicago Hard ware Foundry seems to be at an end and probably nobody is as glad as the strikers-or rather the workers, for many of them were not strikers.

Those who did take part in the strike, or a number of them, were worked into it by high pressure men of the CIO and professional "strikers" brought along by them to keep the picket line reinforced. Otherwise the employees and their employers no doubt would have settled the wage dispute long ago and the families of the employees would have been spared much privation.

Nobody gained anything through the long-drawn out strike except the CIO, fast becoming famous as a trouble-making, profiteering outfit, contributing much to communism and little to the elevation of labor.

No fair-minded individual is going to dispute labor's right to collective bargaining and we all like to see our neighbors getting fair wages and living the way Americans should live, with the comforts and conveniences that Americans are accustomed to having, but there is no gainsaying that hard times react on the employer as well as on the employee and business has not been so good during the past few month that it justifies increased wages, maybe in some cases it even justifies a cut.

For many years labor has known the right to collective bargaining... Under the leadership of the American Federation of Labor the laborer has seen a good deal of prosperity, good living conditions and well-conditioned homes. Only since John L. Lewis rose to power has labor become the breeding place of unrestrained violence and indifference to law. And many things that have occurred during the Lewis regime point to the conclusion that the CIO is operated principally for that gentleman's gain and personal aggrandizement.

In William Green labor had-and has-a good leader, balanced, intelligent, fairly loyal to his following and sincere in his Americanism. The followers of CIO would do well to return to his fold.

Merit System Is on Waiting List There is no need to grow optimistic over hopes that the merit system will-all of a sudden, replace political spoils-which have always had the best of the merit plans in Government employment. It may be that some forward steps will be made towards Government reorganization, but that will not come in a hurry. When it does there will have to be a Congress in the saddle that thinks more of the United States than it does of political patronage and reprehensible politics, such as now control the Nation.

English Sentiment Against "Peace at Any Price"

The New York Herald-Tribune's London correspondent recently observed that if the Franco-Hitler-Mussolini combination continues to sink British merchantmen carrying supplies to Loyalist Spain, it may eventually "sink the Chamberlain government to boot."

Sentiment in England against the Prime Minister's peace at any price policy" is growing. A short time ago the Government suffered a major loss when Viscount Cecil of Chelwood, president of the League of Nations Union, and a winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, rose in the House of Lords, declared that Chamberlain's policy was 'inconsistent with British honor," and resigned his position as Conservative Party whip. That is about as at his home Sunday afternoon when a arm, so is not enjoying her stay at her July 22. startling as if Majority Leader Barkley should rise in the Senate and declare himself opposed to the New Deal.

In the commons, Chamberlain easily defeated a Labor Party motion of censure. But ten members of the Conservative wing, led by brilliant erratic Winston Churchill, refused to vote, and one Conservative M. P. voted for the motion. Chamberlain's recent speeches have tended to be worried and apologetic-something that is next to unknown in the case of a Prime Minister with a topheavy Commons majority.

The Spanish Loyalists are lasting much better than it was believed they could, and there is a rumor that Hitler and Mussolini are planning to give Franco enough troops and supplies to enable him to win a fast and decisive victory. If that happened, the fight against Chamberlain would undoubtedly reach a fever pitch.

* * * * * Politics on the Air

Political broadcasting will soon become a good deal of a public nuisance. In a few weeks you will likely find, when you go to a friend's house for a quiet evening, that he will tune in on a radio station and make you listen to somebody that he wants to hear-the same "somebody" that you don't want to hear.

Under the new rules of the Federal Communications Commission there is a provision prohibiting stations from exercising censorship of any speech broadcast by a duly qualified candidate. This opens the way to more mud-slinging than has been permitted on the radio

While political candidates will all have to pay the radio fiddler the facilities will be open as at present to free programs. And those are frequently the worst of all. * * * * *

Dictators Fear Freedom

"One of the first things dictators and communists demand is the right of free speech, and one of the first things to which an end is put when they get into power is freedom of speech and freedom of the press. There is no freedom of speech or of the press in Russia, Italy or Germany. Dictators are afraid of the truth."-Southwestern Oregon News, Marshfield, Oregon.

SOLVING OF MINE BOMBING VICTORY FOR SCIENTISTS

Proves Worth of Methods and Sets Precedent for Use of Such Evidence.

Evanston, Ill.-How modern scientific methods of criminal investigation led to the solution of a mine bombing case and set a legal precedent for the admissibility of such evidence in a court of law is told by Prof. Charles M. Wilson of Northwestern university's scientific crime detection laboratory in the current issue of the Journal of Criminal

In 1935 a bitter feud between two rival coal mine unions had created a situation bordering upon civil war in the southern Illinois coal fields. A series of bombings, murders and wholesale intimidations culminated in the bombing of the power house of the Valier Coal mine at Valier, Ill.

The law enforcing officials called upon the scientific crime detection laboratory of Northwestern university to investigate the bombing. All of the resources of the laboratory were utilized in the investigation. From the shattering effect of the explosion, Dr. C. W. Muehlberger, expert on bombings and explosions, was able to establish the fact that a "high" explosive had been used and that therefore the damage could not have resulted from coal dust or gases.

Alarm Clock Gives Clue. In examining the scene of the explosion, the university's investigators found the battered remains of an alarm clock, together with six dry cells and several brass gears. Attached to the alarm clock were two types of wire, pieces of adhesive tape and a length of linen twine which had been used in the construction of the timing device.

M. E. O'Neill, the laboratory chemist, compared a piece of linen cord attached to the alarm clock which set off the bomb with cord found in the workshop of two suspects and found them to be similar in color, number of strands, direction and twist.

The suspects were subjected to an examination by means of the poly-graph or "lie-detector" by Prof. ter, Kenosha, spent Sunday with Mrs. Leonarde Keeler, director of the Rohnow's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Willaboratory. In his investigation, Professor Wilson employed the same technique used by police scientists in identifying fired bullets. Photomicrographs-pictures taken through a microscope-were made of the ends of the wire found on the clock and in the workshop. Sets a Precedent.

This is believed to be the first time in the history of police science that photomicrographs have been used in the investigation of implements other than bullets.

By means of this comparison, Professor Wilson was able to establish that not only had both pieces of wire been drawn from the same die but that they had originally been immediately adjacent to each other in the same shaft of bimetallic wire.

Before arriving at this conclusion and in an effort to properly interpret his results, Professor Wilson examined numerous wire specimens obtained from various manufacturers. He also visited a number of wire mills and obtained first-hand information relative to the manufac-

As a result of the evidence obtained by the Northwestern scientists, the suspects were convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary. The admissibility of the evidence was recently upheld by the Supreme court of Illinois which sustained the trial court's conviction.

Pants Pocket Blazing Initiates a Fire Chief

Fairport Harbor, Ohio.-George Knuttinen, new fire chief, received a scorching initiation into his duties. Bustling with efficiency, he entered a store where he had smelled smoke. The manager also had smelled smoke. They searched the building, attic to basement. The odor of smoke followed them, but they found no fire.

The chief went outdoors and checked automobiles at the curb. None was burning. At that point in the search, the chief suddenly found the fire-in his pants pocket, a scorcher of a blaze having started from a pack of matches which had ignited in his pocket.

Herder Frustrates Lion by Stuffing Its Mouth

Bombay.-Attacked by a lion in the jungle near Jhansi, a young herder saved himself by whipping off his turban and stuffing it in the animal's mouth, according to word reaching here. While the animal struggled to eject the heavy folds of cloth, the youth escaped.

The Antioch Pottery Plant is entertaining visitors these days. That is news because the plant is very busy and it is seldom that they permit the routine to be upset by sight-seeing tours. It is a liberal education in the art of china-making, too, to go through the plant and watch the evolution of three simple raw materials into the lovely finished product that the Pottery plant manufactures. The three material's are flint, feldspar and china clay; in the process of evolution they are thrown together into a ball with a lot of little round stones that grind the whole into a fine powder in the course of 18 hours of turning the mill. From there the powder goes to an agitator for the extraction of all metal, and from that through a 200 mesh screen for further refining. On from there to the pressure bags for the removal of all water, then to the plug mills for the removal of air, and then we are ready to really go places.

The material for hollow ware goes into plaster paris casts for molding and the material to be transformed into plates and such flat ware is subjected to an impudent little implement called the jigger which puts the finishing touch to anything that comes within its range. Then after that the heat, and plenty of it. Some 80 hours or then lesser degrees and cold water immersions to fortify the chinaware against chipping, cracking of glaze, etc. Mrs. A. G. Simon, wife of the plant manager, makes a charming hostess and knows her stuff when it comes to piloting the sight-seer and telling her how. And here's SOME-THIN: you'll find any number of darling china pieces, at about onefourth their actual selling price, just because of imperfections so small the naked eye can scarcely find them.
